INTRODUCTION

This collection is centered on James Marsh Morey, a Confederate soldier and businessman in the enterprise of Morey & Smith, Importers, Boston, Massachusetts, and later in partnership with Henry R. Brown in Greeneville, Tennessee. The James Marsh Morey Papers were given to the Manuscript Unit by Richard B. Hughes of San Rafael, California, through the agency of Edward J. Tribble of the University of the South in Sewanee, Tennessee.

The materials in this collection measure 1.26 linear feet. There are no restrictions on the materials.

Single photocopies of unpublished writings in the James Marsh Morey Papers may be made for purposes of scholarly research.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The James Marsh Morey Papers, containing approximately 130 items and 12 volumes, cover the years 1861-1942, with genealogical information dating from the 600s through 1970. The collection is composed of correspondence, accounts, diaries, genealogical books, drawings, maps, newspapers, pictures, invitations and calling cards, a Soldier's Pocket Bible, and a copy of Washington's Farewell Address.

The correspondence of James Marsh Morey spans the years 1865 through 1917 and covers such subjects as his Civil War service, imprisonment and release, love letters to his wife and later business trips, Thanksgiving 1881 away from home and his children, and the upcoming World War (1914-1918) and the United States' involvement. Much of the correspondence to Morey came from his mother and concerned the Civil War, his imprisonment and her efforts for his release, his father's death, and news of friends who were in the war or at home. His sister, Eudora, also wrote to Morey during his stay in prison at Hart's Island, New York. Other correspondence also dealt with Morey's release from prison. Mrs. Louisa Morey, James's wife, wrote love letters and letters concerning family and home life in Greeneville, Tennessee.

The original Civil War Diaries of James M. Morey are in the collection, as well as copies made by his wife and clippings from a newspaper when the diaries were serialized. Morey was a Corporal in Company D, 32nd Regiment, Tennessee Infantry, which was organized at Franklin (Williamson County), Tennessee in September of 1861. His diaries give a day-by-day account of his company's activities, with especially descriptive comments concerning the Georgia Campaign, the Battle of Chickamauga, and Morey's capture, imprisonment, and release from Hart's Island Prison, New York.

A later diary, covering the years 1866 through 1868, is also included. This diary gives information on Morey's schooling at the Commercial College in Boston, Massachusetts, his church work, lectures that he attended (including one given by Henry Ward Beecher on Reconstruction and one by Miss Annie E. Dickenson on Woman's Rights), recall of his experiences during the Civil War (especially the Battle of Chickamauga), and the courting, engagement, and marriage to Louisa H. Broughton. Mrs. Louisa Morey also made a copy of this diary.

There is a diary which was kept by Hannah M. (Herrick) Morey in 1865 while she visited her son, James, in Hart's Island Prison, New York. She wrote of her daily attempts to free her son and the continual frustrations.

Hannah M. (Herrick) Morey also compiled the three genealogical books on the various families (Morey, Lawrence, Cobb, Herrick, Haywood, Beach, et al.). There is a good biographical sketch of Ira Morey (1814-1864) and his work as a minister and teacher in Vermont, Virginia, and Tennessee.

The daybook contains the writings and notations of several different people. It gives the dates of marriages, births, illnesses, deaths, and other tragedies in the family. There is also genealogical information concerning the Broughton family in the daybook.

The collection contains several newspapers which commemorate the anniversary of the American Revolutionary War (1775), the "Peace Jubilee" celebration in Boston, Massachusetts (1869), and news of the progress of the Civil War (1863). There is also a sketch of the positions around Franklin, Tennessee, during the battle there (1864).

There are two photographs of James Marsh Morey and a composite photograph of several Confederate generals, as well as some pictures of the Civil War taken from the book, The Photographic History of the Civil War. Other Civil War memorabilia include some Confederate money, military passes and permits found in the packet carried by Morey during the War, and his Oath of Allegiance. There is also a Soldier's Pocket Bible. Other miscellaneous items include invitations and calling cards, a copy of a story submitted to Woman's Magazine, and a copy of Washington's Farewell Address.
